

LIKE ALL classrooms and educational settings, your carschool should be well maintained and suitably stocked with tools and resources to help your students learn. Some activities in this book don't require any tools at all, but others call for specific items to conduct the lessons. At the beginning of each subject chapter you will find a list of the tools needed to augment every activity suggested. Some materials are recommended repeatedly and will come in handy for all of your carschool studies. These "Top 12" necessities are discussed later in this chapter along with tips from carschooling families about additional resources and "fun packages" that will enrich your carschool environment.

First, let's turn our attention to maintaining a tidy carschool. You will find ideas for organizing materials so they don't wind up all over the floor of the car. I also have some not-too-messy snack suggestions for your carschool cafeteria. Carschool "professors" provide advice and remedies for behavioral potholes and carsickness detours along the way. I've even included parents' recommendations for the best "educational cars" on the market, as well as some
